Treatment of the high-risk infant and child: is it enough? To review current therapies for the high-risk infant and child with the focus on their ability to provide the greatest improvement in survival and reduction in morbidity. MEDLINE database searches were used to identify studies addressing prevention and treatment of infection, neonatal resuscitation, respiratory distress, apnea, morbidity, hyperbilirubinemia, and necrotizing enterocolitis. The treatment of these problems depends on the duration and severity of the illness. Caregivers should be knowledgeable regarding the benefits of each drug and its limitations, and the conditions under which these drugs are generally used. Risk factors, such as prematurity, low birth weight, small for gestational age, sepsis, polycythemia, and cardiac failure, are associated with increased mortality and morbidity. Survival has improved over the past 25 years for many specific problems in the high-risk infant and child. Survival rates for preterm and sick full-term infants have improved over the last 2 decades, but survival rates for some of the high-risk full-term infants remain problematic. IN BRIEF: Follow TOI Tech on Twitter >>> And on Facebook >>> NEW DELHI: The government is drawing up a corpus fund for a national cancer registry that would record the incidence of various forms of the disease and help develop methods of managing and curing it. The move is to ensure detailed information is available on the incidence of cancer in India to plan efficient and cost-effective strategies for prevention and treatment of the disease, Union health ministry officials said. Last month, Union health minister JP Nadda said the government was in the process of setting up a national cancer registry for epidemiological purposes. The idea of such a cancer registry was mooted by Nadda in May 2018, after the last national Cancer Control Programme (2010-2014) and data was only available from selected hospitals and cancer centres. Nadda said India has almost 24% of the global population of cancer patients, and has "preferably" the highest mortality rate per head. India's central cancer registry has recorded a significant jump in the number of cancer patients registered with the body between
